Sonner. To Mr. John Tyler. No. 2. THE ABBUMENT. Agreeable sensations of the author, when relieved from a very cold employment. Advice, gratis. Travel and change of climate refounded. A simile, accidentally suggested to the author whilst writing this sonnet. A faction, under on ironical appellation, deemed to be of so much importance as to require constant and special supervision. Short account of the border wars in Scotland. Hypocrisy of the faction exposed. Their identity with certain artificers in lead, who fabricate metalic takes for the conveyance of water, established. Their propensity to famigate when undeprived of their cylindrical instruments, prophetleally asserted.1
